

01

Introduction

- Introduction
- Background
- Study Objective
- Research Question

1.1 Introduction

Cancer is one group of the most terrifying diseases in modern society, which involves abnormal cell growth with potentially spreading and invading to other tissues of the body. Cancer is a tough medical problem that threatens people's health. Especially, breast cancer has been the most common cancer to women. Previous statistics have shown about 12% of women in the United States were diagnosed with breast cancer, while around 3.5% of them were die of it. On the approximately past 2 decades, there were about 28 death per 10000 women in every year, and the rate has remained constant during this period.

